

ACADEMIC VOCABULARY AND PARAGRAPH WRITING

An academic paragraph normally develops one controlling idea. The topic sentence introduces that idea, supporting sentences provide evidence or explanation, and the closing sentence reinforces the focus.

Cohesion comes from accurate reference words, repeated key terms, and logical connectors. However signals contrast, therefore signals a result, and for example introduces an illustration.

Academic style favors precise verbs and cautious claims. Writers may use suggests or indicates when evidence does not justify certainty. Informal expressions should be replaced with clear, discipline-appropriate wording.

Revision should check unity, coherence, evidence, grammar, and citation. A source must be acknowledged when its ideas, data, or exact words are used, even when the wording has been paraphrased.
